It's the BID's electricity. We pay the bill. Same goes for your parking lot receptacles / electricity. I could ask the security firm what they advise. We could ask Ruben what he wants before writing a citation.

We could lock the BID receptacles but I haven't wanted to get into the expense & cumbersomeness of 100 small padlocks, which we could do. My thinking was also that someone intent on theft would break the more expensive receptacle to get it open if it was locked.

So how do we find out our legal standing. Do we need to have stickers or notes by the outlets? I have tried to get ours locked but no one seems to think it is possible.

It is theft. Maybe we should think about doing some enforcement w/ private security, which would not be Steve, as don't believe. Derryl has confronted these guys and been ignored.

I think some may be tagging on to airport. I wonder if that is theft in any way. We have the issue at our centers as well.

As I was coming out of Starbucks on Sepulveda, I noticed that the RV parked behind me, had unplugged the tree lights and plugged him/herself into that outlet. Somehow I don't think that's legal. Anyone out there know the answer to that?
